The town is deserted. Society melt d away last week-and before that-like a dew under rays of the morning sun. And the joke of the whole is, that up to this time we've had very moderate summer weather, indeed, with no sort of repetition of last year's torridity, while up North and at some places on the coast the cold has been miserable. Mrs. Baarent Ten Brock, wix went to Charlevolx a fortnight ago with her children, writes that heavy clothing in the day and a wood fire every time the sun goes down are the regular programme, while for anything like vachting and out-door sports they wrap themselves in the heaviest golf capes they have and are jalight in their tranks. Really, summering un-der those conditions is not altogether ad-mixed joy. One would almost rather re-

It was generally expected that the trap-plings would be say and the attending in the cottings at Wequetonsing, where Miss Lind-say has been ever since the beginning of summer. The bride-elect is a daughter of ex-Senator Lindsay of Kentucky, but loss of late years made her home in St. Louis with her aunt, Mrs. Scott, and taken peet in all the festivities which are unnipresent at this household. She is a tall, disnified and stylish girl, with many friends in the beset of town. Mr. Squire is known only to intimates of the family, as he has visited St. Louis but few times. plies Nellie Murphy of Morgan street deserted last week for Chicago, where the fil visit Miss Margaret Durkin and other friends. Before returning to St. Louis in the fall she probably will take in some of the Northern inke resorts. Miss Murphy, who is a dainty little brunette, is a gradbate of St. Vincent's Seminary, and is des flued to become even more popular in so-clety than she was among her classmates and companions at school.

Some questions relative to the leaving of visiting cards which I have received are us follows, with appended answers:

If Mr. and Mrs. Smith invite Mr. and Mrs. Jones to a reception how many cards should the Joneses leave if they attend? Not any. Mr. and Mrs. Jones should pay a visit to the Smiths not later than two weeks after the reception, when one "Mr. and Mrs." card is left. Some persons do single cards. In that case Mr. Jones leaves two of his cards, since he calls on both his host and hostess. Mrs. Jones leaves but e card for her hostess, as ladies do not

If Mr. and Mrs. Smith have a married daughter living with them, should cards be left for her? If there is also a single daughter in society, does she receive a card also? What about grown sons?

Mr. and Mrs. Jones leave cards only for the persons whose names appeared on the cards of invitation. If that is the case with the married daughter both the Joneses leave an extra card for her. They do not call upon the sons, and unless the single daughter was honored by the reception, in-troduced or something of the kind, she, too. does not come in for cards. A whole pack of cards is not good form, anyway.

If Mrs. Chicago invites Mr. and Mrs. Jones to the wedding of her daughter and the reception to be given at the home of the bride's married sister, should cards be sent to her? Should a note of acknowledgment to Mrs. Blank be sent, or merely cards? [Wedding invitations do not require cards family friends, when wedding cards from the Chicagoes are received, a polite note written in first person and in cordial and congratulatory terms, is the pleasant thing from Mrs. Jones to Mrs. Chicago, or else is the bride herself. Such notes to the highe usually accompany a wedding gift. In addition to the cards of both Mr. and Mrs. Jones, which have been placed in a small envelope and put inside the gift package. If the Chicagos are mere acquaintances no note is necessary. If the wedding cards state a reception day, then mail a "Mr. and Mrs." or else single cards to the house, addressed to the bride if she is giving the reception, or the married sister the house is hers. A card is always left essential to every girl's outing. A big scrap book is necessary, into which one can put dance cards of those hops that linger long-est in the memory, bits of verse which somebody wrote on birch bark or what not, tally cards, invitations, clever summer notes, theater programmers and even trink notes, theater programmes, and even trunk tags and hotel menu cards. On some blank pages write all the joyful events, luncheons, praics, sails, and the rest. Autographs riends and chance acquaintances might kept as well-indeed, the field is practiy limitiess. If the owner is nimble with r fingers she can make berself a stunning ver, embroidering one on denim, heavy en, canvas or silk, as pleases her fancy, e might make a beauty out of dull green ather, decorating it with a burnt pattern if she knows how to burn.
